

KITTY KWAN 龔

See True Light Old Girls

Kitty Kwan is the youngest child of General Guan Linzheng, a prominent general fought in World War II and the Chinese Civil War, who later chose to retire in Hong Kong.

Though Kitty and I both studied at True Light Middle School of Hong Kong for years, we only became good friends some time after school leaving. While I was staging a large performance in Hong Kong, she generously did a lot of voluntary work. After the performance, as I had never been to Mainland China, she treated me to a chrysanthemum exhibition in Guangdong, China.

Kitty later showed an interest in photography and studied with Luo Sumin, a respected photographer in Hong Kong. She gave me a print of her photo of the Yellow Mountain (Huangshan - which I have included in this display), and said it was hard work. As a student, showing respect to her master, she carried Mr Luo Sumin's heavy equipment, and the Yellow Mountain was wet and slippery! Kitty said: "I owe a lot to Master Luo. He likes me very much and often says I was more observant more than many."

Kitty travels widely to take photos. The link to her photos:

Kitty lived for a while in the UK then went to Australia, but ended up living in the US. I have not seen her for years. She sends her photos to me from time to time, and I can see that she's getting better and better. I am very impressed by the prints she sent to me for this display. I think you will agree.
